"Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War: At 10:45 a. m. Gen. Grant telegraphed as follows:

"Everything has been carried from the left of the Ninth Corps. The Sixth Corps alone captured more than 3,000 prisoners. The Second and Twenty-fourth Corps captured forts, guns, and prisoners from the enemy, but I cannot tell the numbers.

"We are now closing around the works of the line immediately enveloping Petersburg. All looks remarkably well. I have not yet heard from Sheridan. His headquarters have been moved up to Banks' House, near the Boydton road, about three miles south-west of Petersburg.

SECOND DISPATCH.

CITY POINT, Va., April 2-8:30 p. m.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War: At 4:30 p. m. to-day Gen. Grant telegraphed as follows:

"We are now up and have a continuous line of troops, and in a few hours will be entrenched from the Appomattox below Petersburg to the river above. The whole captures since the army started out will not amount to less than 12,000 men, and probably, fifty pieces of artillery. I do not know the number of men and guns, accurately, however.

"A portion of Foster's Division, Twenty-fourth Corps, made a most gallant charge this afternoon and captured a very important fort from the enemy, with its entire garrison.

"All seems well with us, and everything is quiet just now."

"A. LINCOLN."

Previous Official Dispatches.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, April 1, 1865.

Major-Gen. DIX: The following telegram in relation to the military operations now going on at the front was received this morning. Nothing later has reached this Department.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Sec. of War.

"CITY POINT, Va., March 31, 1865-8:30 p. m.

"Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

"At 12:30 p. m. to-day Gen. Grant telegraphed me as follows:

"There has been hard fighting this morning. The enemy drove our left from Danby's House back well toward the Boydton plank road. We are now about to take the offensive at that point, and I hope will more than recover the lost ground."

"Later he telegraphed again, as follows:

"Our troops, after being driven back to the Boydton plank road, turned and drove the enemy in turn and took the White Oak road, which we now have. This gives us the ground occupied by the enemy this morning. I will send you a Rebel flag captured by our troops in driving the enemy back. There have been four flags captured to-day."

"Judging by the two points from which Gen. Grant telegraphed, I infer that he moved his headquarters about one mile since he sent the first of the two dispatches."

"A. LINCOLN."

SECOND DISPATCH.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1-11 o'clock p. m.

To Major-Gen. DIX: The following dispatch from the President, received to-night, shows that the desperate struggle between our forces and the enemy continues undecided, although the advantage appears to be on our side:

"CITY POINT, Saturday, April 1, 1865.

"Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Sec. of War:

"Dispatches just received showing that Sheridan, aided by Warren, had at 2 p. m., pushed the enemy back so as to retake the Five Forks, and bring his own headquarters up to Fort Boiesseaux.

From Our Special Correspondent.

FIRST DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS, March 30, 1865.

At 4 p. m. yesterday the enemy was seen to be massing troops in front of that part of our line held by the First Division, Ninth Corps. This led Gen. Wilcox to strengthen that point, and to put his pickets on the alert. At 10:15 a rocket shot up from the Rebel lines, and at once a heavy fire was opened from their batteries on the right and left of the point menaced. A little later this was followed by a heavy musketry fire from the nearest line of their defenses, distant about 175 yards from our line. For some time this fire was kept up with vigor, and our batteries replied to it as vigorously, while the Second and Third Brigades of the Division lay quietly ready to meet any attack. Then the enemy showed outside of their defenses the head of a strong column, as if to make an attack upon Battery 11 and the line about it, but the fire of our artillery forced the column to get hastily under cover again. The firing was kept up some time longer upon our defenses between Battery 11 and Fort Steadman, and finally ceased at 1:10 a. m.

This section of our line is that which was carried by the enemy on the 25th instant, and which they were forced to relinquish after a short struggle.

The object of the enemy in this attack appears to have been to feel the strength of our line at the point mentioned, and to draw off troops from our left, by an attack, if the point was found to be weak, or by a show of attack in case the line was found strong. The latter seems to be the most likely, for they made a show of the attack which they would not have done if any real effort was meant, as on the 25th instant, when their attack was quiet and sudden.

All the firing being done in the dark, the loss was small on our side and could not have been great on that of the Rebels. Only fifty-one men were hit on our side, the only officer of rank killed being Major Brown, 18th New-Illamphire Volunteers.

On the side of the Rebels the loss may not have exceeded 200 men, their force having been only at one time from under cover.

During the attack (real or feigned) the Third Division of the Ninth Corps was held in line, ready to support the Righteans, had it been necessary. The men of the latter behaved in a cool manner, and would have repulsed the enemy with great loss had they closed on our line of defenses.

The steps taken by Gen. Wilcox to meet the danger were very prudent, and his orders were well issued by his A. A. General, Brevel Major W. V. Richards, a young and promising officer.

I send herewith a list of the few casualties in the First Division, the only one under fire.

THURSDAY'S BATTLE.

Thursday's Battle—The Situation—Our Losses.

HQs. ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Thursday, March 30, p. m.

Notwithstanding a heavy rain-storm, which set in last night and continued until late this afternoon, the army has to-day advanced about two miles, and the Fifth Corps has reached the Boydton plank road, near its junction with the White Oaks.

This is the place where the Second Corps had an engagement with the enemy last Autumn, in which it suffered severely.

The ground gained to-day cost us but few men, the Rebels making but very slight resistance.

Hatcher's Run, which is only a short distance further on, the enemy have strong earthworks erected, defended with heavy guns, and here they will no doubt make a stand to oppose our further advance.

From this point the new line extends east to the Armstrong Mill, the Second Corps holding the right of disposition.

In the engagement of yesterday, the number of prisoners taken was 123, with eight commissioned officers. They belonged to Bushrod Johnson's Division, and were a part of the force that made the attack upon our lines last Saturday.

The Rebels made a demonstration at several points on the old line last night, for the purpose, evidently, of ascertaining whether the works were held in force. They did not gain anything, however, excepting the information that the line was strong enough to defend itself.

This explains the firing heard at City Point on Wednesday night and early on Thursday morning.

Nothing has yet been received here as to the operations of the Cavalry, but they will, it is not doubted, give a good account of themselves.

A battle is expected to-morrow for the possession of the South Side Railroad, and judging from the confidence and high spirits of the officers and men, there will be a good result.

GRAVELLY HILL, Thursday Night, March 30, 1865.

RAIN.

Soon after closing my dispatch last night the clouds which had overcast the sky during the day began clearing their aqueous burden, continuing all night without cessation until to-night. As I write the stars again twinkle from an unclouded sky, and we have the agreeable assurance of a fine day to-morrow. And yet even this indication of fair weather leaves much to be desired, as when we remember the unaccountable and sometimes indulged in by the elements in this latitude.

AN ADVANCE

was made this morning along our whole left operating wing, the enemy giving way after indulging in some spiteful sharpshootings, to his main works across the Boydton Plank road. Our movement was developed portions of his line, and discovered the fact that he still maintains, with a bold front, his old earthworks covering the Southside Railroad. Our advance was perhaps most hotly contested opposite Gen. Birney's division and north of the intersection of the Vaughn road with Hatcher's Run, where the enemy used considerable artillery, doing us but little damage, however. A battery was likewise unmasked beyond Danby's Mill, in front of Smith's brigade of the Second Corps, and several shots thrown at our advance.

A RECONNOISSANCE

was made to White Oak Grove this morning by Merritt's Division of Cavalry, and the enemy found to be guarding the different avenues approaching the Southside Railroad.

OUR PRESENT LINE

In the skirmish to-day have been few, and will not probably foot up to more than 40 or 50 at the highest estimate.

OUR PRESENT LINE

In general direction is the same as yesterday. The whole movement thus far cannot, perhaps, be more comprehensively explained than by saying that our left or movable wing has executed what is known in military evolutions as a right wheel with the pivot of the wheeling line resting near the Vaughn road at the point where it crosses Hatcher's Run. We now have possession of the Boydton Plank road, several miles north of Diviside Court-House, and five and a half or six from the Southside Railroad. From the point where our left crosses the Boydton Plank road line extends nearly eastward, almost the entire distance through thick forests of pine saplings, across Hatcher's Run to our original line and with it forming an obtuse angle. If the reader will consult an ordinary map he will find no difficulty in comprehending the present situation of affairs on our left. From Petersburg, running south-west to Diviside Court-House, he will discover the Boydton Plank road, and also another leading from the first mentioned place southward, gradually diverging from the Boydton Plank, crossing Hatcher's Run several miles to the east and passing South of Diviside Court-House. This is known as the Vaughn road, between which and the Boydton Plank our new line extends four or five miles north of Diviside Court-House. The Quaker or "Military road" leaves the Boydton Plank running directly south until it strikes the Vaughn road, South of and near the junction of the Boydton and Quaker roads the left of our line rests.

THE MUD AND RAIN

together have conspired to render the day as unpleasant and disagreeable as it well could be, and to impede Mark Tapley and be jolly under present circumstances, would be something very far removed from the region of possibility. In pursuit of information the writer visited several points along our line this morning, and is compelled to announce his endeavors to reach certain other points as fruitless and abortive on account of the depth of mud. Now your horse goes wallowing through a miniature sea of filthy, tenacious mud, withdrawing his foot with a loud "cluck" only to sink knee-deep a moment after. A gentle application of the whip or spur, his endeavors to extricate himself are crowned with success, and you begin to congratulate yourself on finding a firmer footing, when down plunge the legs of your patient animal, who struggles on only to find new sloughs. You turn back and ride among the pines, hoping to avoid further submergence explorations. The ground is covered with dry pine twigs and has a firm look, but you soon lose all confidence in appearances, and, if a philosopher, resign yourself to your fate and trust to your horse for your extrication. Here you come up to a gun drawn by ten horses, who, whipped mercilessly by their drivers, are plunging along, now in and now out of the muddy depths, toward the front, and a short distance behind a caisson is sent sunk up to the hubs in mud, and defying the efforts of the animals to extricate it. A little further on and an ambulance is discovered in the same predicament, with men with their shoulders to the wheels vainly endeavoring to shove the horses forward.

CONDUIT ROADS

are now of the greatest importance, and are being rapidly constructed by large details from every brigade. Until our rear is thoroughly cordoned an advance is, of course, impossible.

THE WEATHER AGAIN.

As I close this letter the power of rain drops reminds me that the expectation in which I indulged of fine weather to-morrow is doomed to disappointment. I enclose a list of casualties in the First Division of the Fifth Corps, in the engagement on the left yesterday.
